A youth hostel is like a simple, low-cost hotel, offering very basic rooms and few services. Hostel guests are usually backpackers, students, and other travelers with a limited budget. By staying in a cheap room, they have more money to spend on other vacation expenses.

Unlike hotels, most hostels have dormitory rooms, which are shared by many people. Bathrooms and showers are usually shared by all guests, too. Some hostels also offer more expensive private rooms with private bathrooms. Most hostels have shared kitchens where guests can cook their own food. Some may have their own small cafés or restaurants, but guests usually won't find things like tennis courts or swimming pools. Don't bother calling for room service, either—there is none.

Hostels are usually conveniently located in areas which are popular with independent tourists who want a simple, relaxed place to stay. They aren't really intended for people who prefer more privacy, a higher level of service, and the luxury of a hotel.

The Tienhsiang Catholic Hostel in Taiwan's Taroko National Park has run for over fifty years. A bed in a shared dorm room is only NT$250 per night. Nearby Tienhsiang Youth Activity Center Hostel offers dormitory room beds for NT$450. It's wise to call first to check that beds are available and always keep your valuables safely with you while staying at a hostel. Enjoy your holiday!
