Body Imperfect

When I had my legs amputated(截肢) at the age of 29, my life became totally different, from an attractive woman to an object of pity and fear. I was forced to think again the idea of "physical perfection" that I had always embraced. However, I was not aware of this change at first because I was busy with medical rehabilitation(復健) process. With strong support from my friends and family members, I regarded myself as a "winner."

When I was discharged from hospital, I thought others would see my success. Unfortunately, rolling through a mall in my wheelchair, I discovered that others did not view me the way I had viewed myself.

While I sat thinking about what had happened, a little girl came up to me. She curiously stared at the empty pants that once contained my legs. She knelt(跪) down and put one pant leg up as far as she could reach. Finding nothing there, she withdrew it. Then, she looked up at me and innocently asked, "Lady, where did your legs go?" I explained that my legs had been very sick. Since they hadn't been strong and healthy like hers, the doctors had to remove them. To my surprise, she said gladly, "Oh, they must have gone to `Leg Heaven'!"

That incident made me think about how differently children and adults react to the unknown. To a child, an odd appearance is an interesting learning experience. However, adults often view the same thing with fear and disappointment. I began to realize that I, too, had had the same inappropriate reactions before I know what life was like for the physically challenged. But now, I live my life with a positive attitude. I attempt to show society that having a not-so-perfect body is not synonymous(同義的) with my quality of life.

36. () This passage is mainly about _____.
(A) a successful treatment (B) a child's creativity
(C) a viewpoint on physical perfection (D) the key to a successful career

37. () In the second paragraph, the word “discharge” is closest in meaning to “_____.”

38. () In the mall, a little girl was _____ about the woman's empty pants.
 (A) anxious (B) curious (C) upset (D) excited
39. () According to the passage, which of the following is NOT true?
 (A) The little girl was so mean that she asked the woman a very rude question.
 (B) During the woman's stay in the hospital, she had put a lot of effort into improving her health conditions.
 (C) The woman had been an attractive woman before her legs were amputated.
 (D) The woman moved around in a wheelchair after losing her legs.
40. () What can we infer from the last paragraph?
 (A) Children are easily scared away by an odd appearance.
 (B) Adults often view physical disabilities as a learning experience.
 (C) It is impossible for the physically challenged to live a life of good quality.
 (D) Children and adults may have different reactions to something they don't understand.
