七、閱讀測驗

The fear of public speaking is often considered by many psychologists to be people's number one fear. This was especially true for King George VI of England because of his stuttering problem.

The movie "The King's Speech," tells the true story of how King George VI addressed his stutter and his fear of public speaking to give inspirational speeches to his people during World War II. The movie begins in the 1920's with a younger George, not yet king, frustrated with his inability to speak clearly despite years of work with innumerable experts. He then meets Lionel Logue, who uses unusual techniques to help his patient, including having the prince speak while music is blasting into his ears through headphones. Much to young George's surprise, this helps, and he grows to trust the expert. Then in 1936, when his brother gives up the throne, King George finds himself in the dreaded spotlight.

Just three years later, at the outbreak of World War II, the man who is now King George VI must give a speech over the radio to inspire the British people and troops.
